YE EDITOR'S PIG.

from Parson's Journal

On an evil day an editor of one of the leading newspapers of Par ons bought two things he foully imagined were pigs. They did ook more like a cross between posums and big rats. The man R eves the sold them said they were readed. The editor believed it. und also thought they had been weared too soon but hoped that 200d feed would overcome that de-feet. The paper man fed them sect. The paper man led them stop, corn meal, wheat bran, potators and turnips. The lot was full of acorns, too, and it seemed that the pigs had a fair show to fatten they didn't. They ran up and down the fence all day and dishit and the sections. night and squealed as if possussed of a thousand devils. Months have passed. The man turned them out and tried to run them off, but they wouldn't go Soon as they got fat enough to fry themselves they will die. They will be shot in the place where the corset would be smallest if they were there and the gun would be loaded with birdshot so they will be all day dying and then the editor will be out of the hog business
